Your Responsibility When Using the Information Provided Below:

When we wrote this Informational Material we did our best to give you useful and accurate information because we know that prisoners often have difficulty obtaining legal information and we cannot provide specific advice to all the prisoners who request it. However, the laws change frequently and are subject to differing interpretations. We do not always have the resources to make changes to this material every time the law changes. If you use this pamphlet, it is your responsibility to make sure that the law has not changed and is applicable to your situation. Most of the materials you need should be available in your institution law library.

Information Re: Direct Appeals of Criminal Convictions

(updated January 2012)

We have received your request for help with an appeal of your criminal conviction. This office does not represent prisoners in challenges to criminal convictions. However, the courts of appeal will appoint a lawyer for any prisoner who has filed an appeal of a criminal conviction and who does not have enough money to hire a lawyer.

This information letter explains (1) how to file the paperwork to start an appeal; (2) how to request appointment of an attorney to represent you for the appeal; (3) what organizations can help you with filing a notice of appeal if you cannot do so on your own or if you missed the deadline; and (4) where to find information about other way to challenge a criminal conviction or sentence. Note: the information in this letter applies only if you were convicted of one or more felonies (or a mix of felonies and misdemeanors) in California state court; there are different forms and procedures for appeals in cases that involve only misdemeanors. There are also different procedures for juvenile court cases or criminal convictions issued by federal courts or other states' courts.

1. How to File an Appeal

An appeal may be taken from a final judgment in a criminal case. A final judgment includes order sentencing a person to jail or prison or an order granting or revoking probation. People may also appeal orders made after the sentencing hearing that substantially affect their rights, such as an order imposing more restitution or an order reducing the amount of pre-sentence credits. (Penal Code § 1237.)

Board of Directors

Penelope Cooper, President • Michele WalkinHawk, Vice President • Marshall Krause, Treasurer
Honorable John Burton • Felecia Gaston • Christiane Hipps • Margaret Johns
Cesar Lagleva • Laura Magnani • Michael Marcum • Ruth Morgan • Dennis Roberts

An appeal is started by filing a form called a “Notice of Appeal” with the superior court in which you were convicted. The Notice of Appeal must be filed within sixty (60) days after the date that you were sentenced (or the date that the post-sentencing order that you are appealing was made). (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 8.308.) If the superior court clerk receives a Notice of Appeal from a prisoner after the 60 day period has expired, but the envelope shows that the notice was mailed or delivered to prison staff for mailing within the 60-day time period, then the notice will be considered to be timely. (Rule 8.25(b)(5); In re Jordan (1992) 4 Cal.4th 116.)

The official Notice of Appeal form (CR-120) is attached to this letter. If you don’t have the official form, you can create your own “Notice of Appeal”; you just need to write on a piece of paper: (1) the case number and the name of the court, and (if you know it), the date the judgment was entered, which usually means the date that you were sentenced, (2) a statement that you are appealing, and (3) your signature and the date that you are signing the document. (Rule 8.304(a)(4).)

The procedure is a bit more complicated if you want to appeal following a guilty or no contest plea. If you file a Notice of Appeal after a guilty or no contest plea, you need to state generally what matters you are appealing, and depending on what types of legal arguments you want to make, you may have to file an additional form called a “Request for a Certificate of Probable Cause.” Also, please note that if you pled guilty or no contest, you cannot argue on appeal that your conviction should be overturned just because were innocent of or had a defense to the crimes to which you pled; by pleading guilty or no contest, you admitted every element of the offenses. (People v. Hoffard (1995) 10 Cal.4th 1170, 1177-1178.) Following are the general types of issues you can raise on appeal after a guilty or no contest plea, and how to request permission to raise those issues:

- (A) If you want to appeal based only on things that happened after you entered your plea and that do not affect the lawfulness of the plea agreement itself (such as claims that the prosecutor or court violated the terms of your plea bargain or that your sentence was not lawful), then you need to state that your appeal is “based on the sentence or other matters occurring after the plea that do not affect the validity of the plea.” If you want to appeal the denial of a motion to suppress evidence that happened before you entered you plea, you must state that the appeal is “based on the denial of a motion to suppress evidence.” (Rule 8.304(b)(4).) If you use the official Notice of Appeal form (CR-120), there are boxes that you can check to make these statements.
- (B) If you want to argue that your guilty or no contest plea was not lawfully entered, then you must file a Request for a Certificate of Probable Cause to seek permission to challenge the plea itself. (Penal Code § 1237.5(a); Rule 8.304(b)(1).) Examples of arguments for which you must get a Certificate of Probable Cause include claims that you did not understand what the plea meant, were not advised of your rights to go to trial, were not accurately informed about consequences of pleading guilty, or that the court did not follow rules requiring it to find a factual basis for the plea. To raise these types of issues, when you write out your Notice of Appeal, you should state that your appeal “challenges the validity of the plea or admission.” The official Notice of Appeal form (CR-120) has a box you can check to make that statement and a second page that you can use to explain your Request for a Certificate of Probable Cause. If you don’t have the official form, then you must write a separate statement with the name of the court and the case number that is entitled “Request for Certificate of Probable Cause.” In the statement, you must describe why you believe your plea agreement was not lawful and should be undone. At the bottom of your Request, you must write, “I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct and that this statement was written on [the date you write the statement] at [the city and state where you wrote the statement],” and then you must sign the Request. You can send the Request for a Certificate of Probable Cause to the superior court with your Notice of Appeal or in a separate envelope. However, like the Notice of Appeal, the Request for a Certificate of Probable Cause must be filed within sixty (60) days after the judgment is entered (which usually is the date you were sentenced).

The Prison Law Office has a free information letter with more information about the issues that can and cannot be raised on appeal after a guilty plea. If you would like the Prison Law Office to send you that information, please send that office a request for the Guilty Plea letter.

After you fill out the paperwork, you must send the Notice of Appeal and any Request for a Certificate of Probable Cause to the clerk of the superior court in which you were convicted. Rule 8.304(a)(1)). A list of addresses for the superior courts for all California counties is attached to this letter.

Once the superior court receives the Notice of Appeal, the superior court clerk will begin preparing transcripts of the superior court proceedings and will notify the court of appeal that you are appealing your criminal case. If you have filed a Request for a Certificate of Probable Cause, the superior court will decide whether you should be allowed to challenge your plea agreement. If the court believes there are possible grounds for arguing that your plea was not valid, the court will issue a Certificate of Probable Cause giving you permission to raise those arguments in your appeal briefs. If the superior court denies your Request for a Certificate of Probable Cause, you can file a petition for writ of mandate in the court of appeal challenging the denial. (People v. Castelan (1995) 32 Cal.App.4th 1185, 1187; In re Brown (1973) 9 Cal.3d 679, 683; People v. Hoffard (1995) 10 Cal.4th 1170, 1180.)

If more than 60 days have passed since you were sentenced, you should immediately contact one of the appellate program offices listed under topic number 3, below. If you did not file your Notice of Appeal on time, and there is a good reason why you missed the deadline, the appellate program office may be able to help you ask the court for permission to proceed with your appeal. For example, courts might allow you to appeal even though your Notice of Appeal was filed late if you did your best to file on time but prison staff caused a delay or if your lawyer did not follow through on a promise to file a Notice of Appeal for you. (See People v. Lyons (2010) 178 Cal.,App.4th 1355.) The appellate program office may also be able to help if you have problems understanding the forms, if your Request for a Certificate of Probable Cause is denied, or if you have other problems getting your appeal case started.

2. Requesting Appointment of Counsel

A person who is “indigent” (meaning with very little or no money) is entitled to a free lawyer to represent him or her on a direct appeal in a criminal case. Unlike the Notice of Appeal and Request for a Certificate of Probable Cause, there is no set deadline for requesting appointment of an attorney. Generally, even if you don’t ask for an attorney, the Court of Appeal will send a notice asking if you want to make such a request after the Notice of Appeal has been filed.

Getting a lawyer appointed is a simple process. If you file your Notice of Appeal using the official form (CR-120), you can check the boxes that say you are requesting an attorney and whether or not you had an appointed attorney in your criminal case in the superior court. If you don’t have the official form or if you have already filed your Notice of Appeal, you can send the court of appeal a document titled “Request for Counsel” and listing the name of the case and the case number(s). Here is sample language you can use:

I, [your name] declare that I am the appellant in the above-referenced matter, and that I am indigent and unable to afford counsel. My total assets are [describe any money or property you own] and my monthly income is [describe any income you receive from work, public benefits or investments]. I hereby request that counsel be appointed in this matter so that my interests may be protected by the professional assistance required. I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct and that this declaration was executed on this date: [fill in date and sign your name]. A list of the addresses of state courts of appeal is attached to this letter.

If the Court needs more information about your financial situation, it will send you another form to fill out. If you qualify for an appointed attorney, the court will assign a lawyer from a panel of attorneys who handle criminal cases. There are appellate program offices that screen the panel attorneys to make sure they are competent to handle criminal appeal cases. The appellate program offices also provide the panel attorneys with training, assistance and supervision. You will receive a notice of your appointed attorney’s name and address.

3. Organizations that Can Help with Getting Your Appeal Started

There are appellate project or program offices that can help you get your appeal started and help with problems that arise in communicating with your lawyer or other parts of the appeal process. There are five appellate program offices that divide up responsibility for the various counties in California. When you write the an appellate program office, you should try to include the county in which you were convicted, the case number(s), the date you were sentenced, and whether you were convicted by a guilty plea or by a trial.

If you were convicted in the county of Alameda, Contra Costa, Del Norte, Humboldt, Lake, Marin, Mendocino, Napa, San Francisco, San Mateo, Solano or Sonoma, write to:

First District Appellate Project
730 Harrison Street
Suite 201

If you were convicted in the county of Monterey, San Benito, Santa Clara, or Santa Cruz, write to:

If you were convicted in the county of Alpine, Amador, Butte, Calaveras, Colusa, El Dorado, Fresno, Glenn, Kern, Kings, Lassen, Madera, Mariposa, Merced, Modoc, Mono, Nevada, Placer, Plumas, Sacramento, San Joaquin, Shasta, Sierra, Siskiyou, Stanislaus, Sutter, Tehama, Trinity, Tulare, Tuolumne, Yolo, or Yuba write to:

Central California Appellate Project
2407 J Street
Suite 301

4. Other Ways to Challenge a Criminal Convictions of Sentence (“Collateral Attacks”)

In a direct appeal case, the Court of Appeal can consider only information that was presented in the superior court through documents, other evidence, testimony or arguments by the attorneys. If your issues are based on evidence or information that is not in the transcripts of the superior court proceedings, then the only way you can raise those issues is by filing a petition for writ of habeas corpus. A habeas corpus petition is sometimes called a “collateral attack” on the criminal conviction or sentence. Examples of issues that might need to be raised in a habeas corpus petition are a claim that your attorney provided ineffective assistance by failing to present witnesses or evidence at your trial or a claim that the district attorney presented false evidence. Another type of issue that might need to be brought in a habeas corpus case is a claim that the court misinformed you about the consequences of your decision to plead guilty and that you would not have pled guilty if you knew the true consequences. Whether you file your habeas corpus petition in the superior court or the court of appeal may depend on several factors, including whether you have a direct appeal case going at the same time. If you are being represented by an attorney in a direct appeal case, your attorney might be able to prepare a habeas petition for you. Thus, you should make sure to tell your appeal attorney about things that happened during your case that you think were unfair and that may not be included in the official trial court transcripts.

The Prison Law Office does not represent prisoners in habeas corpus cases challenging criminal convictions. However, we can provide a free self-help manual on how to file a petition for writ of habeas corpus in state court. We can also provide a free manual on how to file a habeas corpus petition in federal court if the state courts rule against you in your direct appeal or state habeas corpus cases. There is also information on direct appeals and habeas corpus petitions in the Prison Law Office’s publication, The California State Prisoners Handbook, Fourth Edition (4th ed. 2008 and periodic supplements). More extensive information on direct appeals and habeas corpus petitions can be found in Appeals and Writs in Criminal Cases (updated periodically), published by the Continuing Education of the Bar, 300 Frank H. Ogawa Plaza, Suite 410, Oakland, CA 94612-2001. These publications, as well as forms for filing petitions for writ of habeas corpus, should be available in the prison law library.
